PROJECT TITLE

Transformative Transactions: Architecture, Media, City 1920-1970

PROJECT DESCRIPTION

The project explores ways in which architectural knowledge was shaped, transmitted, consumed, and instrumentalized through modes of representational discourse - photography, film, exhibitions, magazines- other than architecture itself in the period (roughly) from 1920 to~ 1970. Focusing on cities in Central Europe (Vienna, Prague, and Budapest, among others), the research is directed toward understanding how evolving technologies of communication, avantgarde art practices, and political and social transformation during this period impacted on architectural culture in the region- generating both public and theoretical discourses regarding the communicative function of the architectural object and the city itself.
